

Charity begins at the office, economists told

Published: January 14, 2026, 3:51 pm

FT.com / Companies / UK companies - Charity begins at the office, economists told.

Economists are to be urged by Sir Gus O'Donnell, Britain's top civil servant, to offer free help to charity, in an initiative that might allow practitioners of the "dismal science" to atone for any errors they made during the financial crash.

What an absurd idea. 99% of economists only believe in self interest: that as the form of autism the French have described as afflicting their profession.

I see it time and again.

I can see no way whilst they retain this opinion they can help charities.