James Carville says:

Democrats would not be playing the blame game with one another for the loss or for the healthcare debacle if they had only pointed fingers at those (or in this case, the one) who put Americans (and most of the world) in the predicament we're in: George W. Bush.

The thesis is a simple one: the right point fringes, plat dirty and win without compunction.

The left need to learn to blame those responsible for the mess we're in. Building bridges with the right is a waste of time. They are the problem. They are the opponents of the common good. We have to say so. Loud, clear and often.
