As the Jersey Evening Post reports:

THE chief executive of the British Bankers Association will be among the speakers at a prestigious one-day finance summit to be held in the Island in September.

It is possible that by that time Angela Knight will be a UK treasury minister, if the Conservatives are successful in the general election expected to take place in May.

Many commentators believe that Bankers Association head Mrs Knight will be part of David Cameron's treasury team if the Tories take over from Gordon Brown's government.

Angela Knight is appalling: an apologist for bankers' abuse on every occasion possible.

Is this what the people of the UK really want, let alone need?
