From the Guardian:

Hundreds of online activists, student leaders and union officials who have been at the forefront of anti-government protests over the past six months are meeting this week to co-ordinate the next stage of their anti-cuts campaigns.

The conference, which is modelled on the successful Netroots Nation campaign in the US, will take place on Saturday and aims to link local campaigns with anti-tax avoidance groups, student protesters, unions, and anti-racism activists.

The NetrootsUK conference has been organised by bloggers, backed by the TUC.

See you there.
