

This is why Maurice Glasman is important

From the Guardian today (and following on from the Billy Bragg article I commented on this morning):

In everything I have ever written or done I have criticised the domination of capital and argued for the democratic renewal of the Labour movement to resist its power. That is all I stand for really. Resistance to commodification through democratic organisation. That's the position. Labour as a radical tradition that pursues the common good. That is Blue Labour, and the rest is commentary.

If only more people could say that.

Good for Maurice Glasman, I say.
