I can only presume today's comment price in the FT on the Isle of Man was paid for.

It cannot be serious journalism.

Just a snippet:

It is the economy's diversity, for an island of 80,000 people, that has helped it come through the downturn with a slowdown rather than a recession.

That did not come about by accident. The Isle of Man has painstakingly built niches in such areas as e-commerce, e-gaming, web hosting, filmmaking, and registering aircraft and ships to broaden its base and avoid over-reliance on financial services.

Film making, I agree, was an innovation. Full marks. The rest are just more tax haven activities! Who do they think they're kidding?
