

ONS on the August labour market and how tax discriminat..

Published: January 14, 2026, 6:59 pm

---

I once claimed there were 7 million people in the Uk who were non-domiciled and was ridiculed for doing so.

This video suggests it's about 6.8 million now.

I won't make the obvious comment.

I will state the obvious fact that this should not give rise to a right to preferential tax treatment - but it does. Discrimination on the basis of national origin in this way is wrong. So why does the government do it? And why does it undermine the stability of the UK's labour markets as a consequence?