As the Guardian notes this evening:

The UK is heading back into recession and will be among the slowest of the world's largest economies to recover in the first half of this year, according to a study by the Paris-based thinktank, the OECD.

I hate to say I told you so, although I will say the OECD does have a track record of spending a great deal to come to the bleeding obvious conclusions.

This is one of them. It didn't take genius to work out George Osborne has messed up big time; just acute observation. Some of us used that some time ago and aren't in the slightest bit surprised that the likes of the OECD are now catching up with us.

The OECD did not say how to get out of the mess either.

The left have. When they catch up with our prescriptions then we'll have breaking news.
