TJN recently blogged the approaching court case pitting UK Uncut against Goldman Sachs. They have now produced an excellent new video asking the simple question about whether it makes sense to implement deep public sector cuts, at a time of large giveaways to some of the world's largest corporations. The film centres on the court case being brought by UK Uncut Legal Action against HMRC over a tax deal done between the revenue and Goldman Sachs in 2010 that saw £20m wiped off the a banking giants tax bill.

For some reason I can't embed the film (or just about any video right now) but all the links are here:
