As Nils Pratley says in the Guardian this morning:

It's becoming increasingly hard to spot the corporate good guys.

Rolls-Royce, the company that gets more favourable name-checks from ministers than even John Lewis, on Thursday said it had passed information about bribery and corruption allegations among intermediaries to the Serious Fraud Office.

Now what's the betting those transactions went through a tax haven using exactly the same structures that are used for tax avoidance? Close to 100% certain, I'd say.
