Eric Schmidt of Google is proud of his company's tax abuse.

Eric Schmidt of Google sits on David Cameron's business adviser panel.

Is David Cameron proud of seeking advice from a person who's proud to be doing his best to undermine the UK economy, harm its chances of closing the deficit, and proud to be undermining the prospects of investment in the UK by denying the government the resources to do just that?

Just asking David.

Would anyone from the Conservative Party like to answer?
