Please accept my apologies if the blog has not worked properly today. Without any warning from my internet service supplier (1&1) I filled the database for this blog at about 7.30 this morning, after which neither I or anyone else could post to it.

My great Wordpress support man - Andy Moyle - got to work and by tonight the blog has been shifted to a new database (in bits), been out back together again and as far as I can see is working again.

But to all those who commented today and whose words of wisdom have been lost I apologise: I could not even put up a blog to warn of the problem.

But take comfort. The new database is six times bigger than the old one. That should keep this blog going for a while.
