

Whilst massive companies are confident they can avoid t...

Published: January 14, 2026, 6:57 pm

---

The FT reported late yesterday:

Britain's employees are feeling more insecure and under pressure at work than at any time in the past 20 years, a large-scale study of the workforce has found.

For the first time, public sector workers are more worried than those in the private sector about losing their jobs. They are also substantially more anxious about losing their status at work.

So we have massive corporations confident they need not pay tax whilst at the same time they can exploit a workforce so reduced to worry about their that they will take work on steadily worsening conditions, and for many on steadily worsening pay.

Is that coincidence or is it just more indication of the onward march of the 21st century neo-feudal state that is being created to undermine the 99% for the benefit of the 1%? I think you know what I think.