

School holidays

School holidays have at long last, and even rather belatedly it seems to me, arrived in Norfolk.

The relevance for this blog is threefold. First, I know from experience that it means that traffic declines.

Second it means I write less often as I am distracted by time off and being dad on occasion. I am told that building a model railway, exploring rivers, taking photographs and tracking down birds of prey all demand my attention, and I'm a willing participant in them all.

Third, it means I moderate the blog less often. So if you have to wait for your comment to appear please do not start shouting about censorship or any other such string (as some always do). It will just be I have something more important to do. I hope you will understand.
