

Moderation: an apology

Published: January 14, 2026, 3:59 am

I apologise for the delay in moderation on the blog yesterday. This will continue today.

A long day of travelling, filming, meetings and talking to journalists means the amount of time available for blogging is limited, and for moderating comments even more so.

I have started today with a backlog of 20 comments and have to get ready for an early train now. This can only get worse as the day goes on. I apologise in advance.

And for those who ask why I moderate comments, that's because I don't take the legal risk of not doing so and nor do I think all comments are welcome. I do use the delete button - sparingly - when appropriate and think all blogs would be better if they did so as well.