

The fundamental flaw with right wing economic thinking

A commentator on this blog highlighted in a few words the fundamental flaw in right wing thinking on economic management overnight when he or she said:

Running a country is not same as running a company. For example when a business lays off workers they become someone else's is problem...a country however can't sack the unemployed...

That's why micro-economic thinking from those who think the country is UK plc is failing us.

We are all in this together. They just haven't realised. Governing for everyone is beyond their imaginations because it is beyond their theories.
