The FT has a headline and byline this morning that read as follows:

Free movement within Europe needs to be less free

By David Cameron

I read with anticipation; had Cameron now realised that the free movement of capital is destroying fair competition, tax justice and the chance for the recovery from austerity in Europe?

No, of course not. He just wants to restrict the free movement of people to greater degree, so providing free moving capital with even greater opportunity to exploit. I guess it was predictable.
