

Does George Osborne have a clue what a plan is?

According to the Treasury this morning:

[George Osborne] set out the five components of his long-term economic plan to build a stronger, more competitive, economy to secure a better future for hard-working families and future generations by:

â€ˆcutting the deficit

*

â€ˆreducing taxes for hardworking people

â€ˆcreating more jobs by backing business

*

â€ˆcapping immigration and welfare

â€ˆdelivering the best schools and skills

He calls that a plan?

A plan says:

- * how we cut the deficit
- * how tax cuts are funded, and who hardworking people are (and are not)
- * what backing business means and how it delivers new jobs

- * what the economic consequences of cutting immigration and social security are
- * how schools and skills will be delivered and at what cost

But there is none of that - I read the speech to check. There's just rhetoric.

Make that George's 6th failure of the day.

Now will Labour offer a real plan instead?
