

It is a fact, universally acknowledged

It is a fact, universally acknowledged, at least by those who practice the art, that there are some days that are just not designed for blogging, and today is one of them.

A far too early train with little signal en route and then back to back meetings until well into the afternoon will sap most desire to blog, as well as the ability to deliver.

So please don't expect a lot and don't get upset (as some do) if I take a while to moderate comments. There are occasions when the day job has to come first, and the fact is most of this blog is written in what many would consider my free time (like early morning).
