Funding the Future

or those who say where something is owned does not mat...

Published: January 12, 2026, 11:30 pm

I note many on the right are claiming who owns a company, and where, does not matter. The context is, if course, the Pfizer bid for AstraZeneca.

If this is true I have one question for those who suggest it. Why, in that case, does Pfizer place the ownership of a significant number of its subsidiaries in tax havens, as the Mail reports this morning?

Where you own something actually seems to matter a very great deal, after all.