My commentary on corporation tax in Northern Ireland reached the Belfast Telegraph this morning, where my piece starts:

I am worried that Northern Ireland could be sleep walking to a disaster on corporation tax. Across the political divide there is support for devolving power to set corporation tax to Stormont and then reducing that rate to 12.5% to supposedly match the rate in the Republic.

It's only 300 words, but it summarises why this issue is one to worry about, and not just in Northern Ireland.
