

The week ahead

As one commentator on this blog has said in the last week of the contributions others have made, there are number of people posting right now whose main aim does, it seems, to be wasting my time to prevent me doing other work.

I have considerable sympathy with that suggestion. So the current rash of commentators who are engaged in posting repetitive, neoliberal commentary of mind-numbingly boring irrelevance on the blog will be finding the delete button in heavy use in the coming week, not least because I will be spending a couple of days of it in and around hospital as part of my on-going dispute with my gall bladder.

Priorities matter. Reading comments from such people comes very low on my list of them, especially when I am sure that the aim is to grind down my willingness to campaign for change. It won't work.
