This is in the Guardian this afternoon:

In a world where the cult of austerity and balanced budgets dominate politics, it would be all too easy for sustainability funding to get lost. That, however, would be a disaster, not just for our long-term future but also for the current economic situation and government finances. Yet there is an option attracting increasing attention that might address all these issues simultaneously; the use of green quantitative easing (GQE).

The article is by me. Can I suggest taking a look?
