100 doctors say

This is from the letter from more than 100 doctors to the Guardian tonight:

The NHS is withering away, and if things carry on as they are then in future people will be denied care they once had under the NHS and have to pay more for health services. Privatisation not only threatens coordinated services but also jeopardises training of our future healthcare providers and medical research, particularly that of public health.

I agree.

I am pleased they said it.

I would love the day when 100 accountants wrote to condemn tax avoidance.
