

The FT isn't buying the government line

I take a host of emails from the FT overnight, and wish other papers would send out news summaries in the same way. One of those mails received this morning read as follows:

So, closing the non-dom loophole is OK, that beating tax loopholes will happen is a universally accepted truth, bankers bonuses need to be addressed and Osborne has not delivered an economic miracle. Despite this Cameron is 'frightened' (I like that it's quoted) about democracy.

Anyone would think the FT has not bought the Conservative line in this election.
