

Does Theresa May have no respect for the rule of law?

According to Politics Home:

Theresa May is to announce an end to freedom of movement in to the UK at the same as triggering the Article 50 process, according to a report. Freedom of movement rules could face a "cut-off" from next month.

The intervention would mean those who travel to Britain after the process to leave the EU has been kick-started would not be granted automatic right to remain once the UK finally quits the bloc.

A government source told the Telegraph that failure to act on limiting new arrivals could spark "half of Romania and Bulgaria coming here".

There's one problem with this. We will still be members of the EU when Article 50 is triggered and have no right whatsoever to do this.

Does the rule of law count for nothing these days?
