

Going walkabouts

Moderation on this blog will be very limited for the next couple of days. I am going for a long walk on the Norfolk coast with a night spent away in the company of John Christensen and David Quentin, both fellow tax justice campaigners, of course.

I have to admit to looking forward to it - even if it looks like we have chosen what might be the worst days for weather for weeks. There are pubs en route. And along the way little bits of the world will be put to rights, I am sure. John and I have a long history of such discussions - and much of the tax justice movement was originally built on them. It will be good to have David add his own distinctive opinions.

I may well be moderating comments then, but just not here.
