I was amused by this in the Telegraph this morning:

Michael Gove has warned Theresa May that Britain risks becoming an outdated "VHS economy" if it accepts calls by big business for the UK to be closely aligned with the EU after Brexit.

The Environment Secretary told Cabinet that the big companies of today may be eclipsed by businesses that don't even exist yet as he made the case for a clean Brexit.

It comes after the CBI, Britain's biggest lobby group, called for Britain to remain in a Customs Union with the European Union after Brexit.

Good to see Gove is sticking to his mantra that the only expert with an opinion that matters is him.
