I had a great time speaking at Leicester Secular Society last night with an audience much bigger than I think the organisers expected. Best of all, the talk started with two songs from the Red Leicester singing group:

People often ask me how they can get involved in political activism: here is one answer. These people are delivering a radical message through their music.

They're appearing in a street choir contest in Brighton in a couple of weeks. If you're in the vicinity, look them out.

And thanks to my hosts.
