Tomorrow is the day when May has to decide. The can is surely running out of road. By Saturday morning she has to be able to instruct advisers what will be in the White Paper on Brexit due out next week. And given that the option has to be both acceptable to the EU and resolve the situation in Northern Ireland whilst, for her sake, let her say we have left the EU, the Norway plus, or Jersey option as it has been called, is the only show in town that works.

But this will provoke massive Brexiteer backlash.

So here is the question: who will have quit the Cabinet by Monday?
