Democracy is, with the exception of divorce, the clearest embodiment there is of the fundamental human right to change your mind.

Those saying that democracy is threatened by a change of heart clearly do not understand what democracy is.

They do, as a result, wish to condemn us to the consequences of a poor decision taken in haste and already regretted.

Perhaps it is no surprise that it is a vicar's daughter, wedded to out of date ideologies, who is the principle proponent today of enforced regret and consequent misery.

Like the vicars of old, she deserves to be ignored.
