The next G7 summit is in Biarritz at the end of August.

The G7 Research Group at the Munk School at the University of Toronto has published a guide to the key issues in advance of the summit, as it always does:

This includes a couple of pages on the work Andrew Baker of Sheffield University and I are doing on tax spillovers, which we (and presumably Munk) think is an issue the G7 should be looking at (click on the image for a bigger version and then tap that one again):

There is more on tax spillovers here.
