Once upon a time concern about nature was for people who picked up binoculars. Not any more, I hope. The latest State of Nature Report makes the issue clear:

We are heavily impacting our environment and the consequences are not beneficial.

Unless we now take biodiversity very seriously we, yet again, threaten life on earth. The lack of awareness about the fact that we live within an ecosystem on which we are utterly dependent is staggering, and as a result we have for far too long been ignoring that reality.

Protecting biodiversity is as much a part of the Green New Deal as tackling carbon is.

Picking up binoculars is good too: I do, quite often.
