

Funding the Future

Michael Gove's Ditchley lecture on innovation and risk ...

Published: January 12, 2026, 11:40 pm

I have read Micheal Gove's speech on the future of government, delivered last night as the Ditchley Lecture.

The speech was all about supposedly radicalising government, adding to the diversity of its delivery and the broadness of its thinking. In the context I think this picture from the Ditchley web site interesting:

Annual Lecture

In this section

Past Events

That's an ageing, very large white and be-suited audience. And this is the audience he chose to speak to radicalism and supposed diversity to? Who is he kidding?