In another sign of the state we're in:

1/ At least 3 Conservative MPs who are thinking of defying Johnson on the bill are being told by whips that if they insist on following the law they will end up as the 'next Dominic Grieve' - "in principle - but out of a job".

2/ I now have confirmation that Boris Johnson / Dominic Cummings have actively threatened Tory MPs with "being expelled from the Conservative Party" if they do not vote for Boris Johnson's law breaking "Internal Market Bill".

3/ Tom Newton Dunn from the 'Times Radio' has now also confirmed that the govt looking at "expelling Tory MPs" who do not back the govt's law breaking...
...this includes former Conservative ministers.

4/ Nigel Farage threatens Conservative MPs who do not vote for Boris Johnson's law breaking Bill...
...with campaigns launched against them in their constituencies.

Deviance from the Party line is not allowed.

A threat to the person follows for those who might contemplate it.

This is the world that we now live in with the government that we have.
