

Usual service, and all that

A small personal note this morning.

I am taking my younger son to university for the first time today. That's both exciting and a little nerve wracking for us both, but most especially for him.

But it's also a big change for me. After nineteen years of having children in the house, with the last few as effective sole parent, I will return to an empty nest. I will be taking a few days off to think about that, as well as the work programme I now have on this autumn, on which I will have more to say soon.

If blogging and comment moderation are slow for the next few days, that's why.

The upside is, of course, that I might have some more time to blog in the future. I know I've been a bit remiss on that front of late. And yes, that is a joke....
