

A note to all existing subscribers - and those who want...

Published: January 12, 2026, 11:24 pm

This is an admin to all existing subscribers to the Tax Research UK email list.

The software used for the existing email listing is ceasing to operate from the end of June this year. This is entirely beyond my control, but does mean that those who get this blog from that list will no longer do so.

As far as I know I have no access to the details of those on that mail list. I am told the total number on it, and nothing more, and I am entirely happy with that.

However, this means that you will need to resubscribe to the new email list that is now in use for this blog. The box for that is at the top right of this page. It looks like this:

Richard Murphy

Read more about me

RSS Subscribe by email

Subscribe

It really is pretty simple to do. And the result is a much cleaner mail system without adverts. The new mails look like this:

Tax Research UK

Richard Murphy on tax, accounting and political economy

Excerpts:

We have to hope that the Fed, Bank of England and ECB continue to believe in fiscal support and low-interest rates. The alternative is an economic disaster.

Martin Wolf weighed in on the inflation debate in the FT yesterday. Having had his customary dig at modern monetary theory, on which it seems

Read the full article...

Read on »

Scotland needs a new tax system

As The National newspaper in Scotland reports this morning: IN the fifth Scottish Independence Convention Transition Paper – Tax Policy For An Independent Scotland –

Read the full article...

Read on »

You will see that the option to unsubscribe is available at any time.

I will still not look at the list and will never use or share your email for any purpose. All you will get are summaries of blog posts here. That is it.

Thanks if you decide to resubscribe. I hope that you do.