

Funding the Future

Is Boris Johnson provoking political violence?

Published: January 13, 2026, 8:43 am

I have just posted this on Twitter:

Richard Murphy
@RichardJMurphy

...

An MP was murdered last week in an act of universally condemned political violence. This morning Boris Johnson uses the language of political violence in the Sun - attacking the so-called 'green shirts' of environmentalists. Is he telling his black shirts to go for them?

THE Sun | MONEY | HEALTH | DEAR DEIDRE | TECH | TRAVEL | MOTORS

EXCLUSIVE

News > Politics

PM ECO VOW Boris Johnson vows 'boiler police' won't kick down doors to rip out dirty gas boilers

Natasha Clark
22:00, 18 Oct 2021 | Updated: 22:11, 18 Oct 2021

Twitter Facebook

BORIS Johnson has vowed "the greenshirts of the boiler police" won't kick down doors to rip out dirty gas boilers.

Ahead of next month's COP26 summit, the PM tells Sun readers he is "on their side".

8:12 AM · Oct 19, 2021 · Twitter Web App

I am deeply shocked by Johnson's choice of language.

He knows what the language of 'shirts' is all about. He is deliberately referring to fascism.

He is deliberately taking sides.

And he is deliberately opposing those who want action taken to save this planet and human life on earth.

He is siding with the black shirts as a result with the deliberate intention that they should silence the left, nominating The Sun to act as their voice piece.

Worse, by the use of this language he is stoking violence against those who think we have a duty to act for the sake of all our children.

I have little doubt that he is encouraging a mob; a mob we are already seeing being mysteriously allowed to act to clear Insulate activists whilst the police stand aside.

This is deeply dangerous rhetoric.

I had already written the thread I have just posted on whether we have a legitimate government by the time I saw this. Now I think we can safely provide an answer.