

How can confidence in the underpinnings of the state be...

Published: January 19, 2026, 5:21 pm

I tweeted this not long ago:

Richard Murphy @RichardJMurphy · 33m

...

If the Met Police didn't notice an illegal party in Downing Street when they were in the building they weren't doing their job. If they did notice the party and did nothing they weren't doing their job. How far does this corruption go?

10

119

402

↑

|||

I don't do these things for the sake of tittle-tattle. What worries me is that the corruption of Johnson and others is so pernicious that the underpinnings of confidence in the state are being destroyed, as I am quite sure is their aim.

The question to be asked is how can that confidence be restored, most especially when we have an electoral system which is designed to not represent the opinions of most people within the UK or any country within it?

I know the SNP answer.

I know too the LibDem and Green answer.

I also know what Plaid Cymru have to say.

But what of Labour? What are they going to say?