

Funding the Future

The future for the Tories - a second look

Published: January 14, 2026, 12:07 am

For those who only read today's posts when arriving here, might I draw attention to yesterday's post on the Tories? According to my stats this only got around 1,000 reads here yesterday but on Twitter the story was somewhat different:

 Richard Murphy @RichardJMurphy · 20h

We know that Boris Johnson's days in Number 10 are numbered now. We can't be sure how many there still are. That his tenure will end well before the time of the next election is, however, seemingly certain. But my question is, so what? What then for the Tories, and us. A thread...

Show this thread

 3,047

 1,360

 169

Impressions ⓘ 304K

New followers ⓘ 1

Profile visits ⓘ 2,882

A reach of 304,000 in a day is pretty good. More than 600 people followed me on Twitter as a result. The thread also got republished on both West Country Bylines and East Anglian Bylines, acting independently. Of the replies, the vast majority were pretty favourable.

I don't often re-promote something that I have written - but this one seems worth a look if you ignore what I have to say on a Sunday - which is, I find, the best day for putting out long Twitter threads, which is how this one started life.