

Funding the Future

In case you thought Covid had gone away, it most defini...

Published: January 13, 2026, 4:57 am

Yesterday Sajid Javid, the Health Secretary, said we need not worry about Covid any more as we are 'past its peak'.

Dr Rachel Clarke has made her name during the Covid crisis due to her accurate and forthright commentary on what is happening in the NHS and beyond. She posted this last evening:

Rachel Clarke
@doctor_oxford

...

Anyone who pretends the NHS can keep delivering highest quality patient care with Covid numbers like this - let alone address the 6.2 million people on waiting lists - just isn't being honest with you.

Coronavirus data

Covid-19 in the UK

73.5% with two vaccine doses and
57.6% with booster top-up

8:56 PM · Mar 21, 2022 · Twitter for iPhone

There have, apparently, never been so many Covid patients in hospital in Scotland as there are now. And they're just ahead of us with the latest wave.

Purely anecdotally, three out of the five homes in the cluster of houses in which I happen to live have a person with Covid in it right now (mine is one of the two exceptions).

Sajid Javid is talking nonsense about Covid and the chance that the NHS will cope with demand in the next year. I very strongly suspect that he knows that. But like the Chancellor, he is a man who does not care.