

Johnson should be resigning today. If he doesn't he's s...

Published: January 14, 2026, 2:48 am

---

As the Guardian notes this morning:

The first fines for lockdown breaches in Downing Street are expected to be issued imminently after Scotland Yard concluded that laws were broken at the heart of government, sources have told the Guardian.

They added:

Multiple government insiders said the Metropolitan police had made referrals for the first tranche of fixed penalty notices (FPNs) connected with parties and gatherings being investigated by police in No 10 and the Cabinet Office. It is understood the Met are expected to issue around 20 fines related to the most straightforward cases, though more are expected to follow.

So, there were parties at Number 10.

And they did break the law.

Boris Johnson denied both things to parliament.

He lied.

That's a resigning offence, whether he gets a fine, or not.

Throughout the last century or more any prime minister would have resigned in this situation. Will Johnson? I doubt it. And that's because this government has no commitment to democracy, at all. All that matters to them is power.

The parallels with Trump's fascism become more apparent by the day.