

When will it be admitted that Brexit has failed?

The FT reports this morning that:

Downing Street is exploring yet another delay to post-Brexit border checks on goods entering Britain from the EU to prevent what industry has warned would be a supply chain disaster.

There is just one obvious question to ask, which is when will it be admitted that Brexit has failed because it has proved impossible to deliver it?

We currently effectively run an open border policy in Great Britain where the law is not upheld, taxation is voluntary and smuggling is no doubt rife. And as a result of course we need a border in the Irish Sea to protect the Single Market which we are not respecting.

When can this fiasco end?
