In The Mirror this morning:

The screenshot shows a news article from The Mirror. At the top, there's a navigation bar with a menu icon, the 'Mirror' logo, and links for NEWS, POLITICS, FOOTBALL, CELEBS, TV, and MONEY. Below the navigation is a large photo of Professor Richard Murphy, an older man with glasses and a beard. A 'SHARE' button is in the top right corner of the photo. The main headline reads: ''Energy price fixing works AGAINST users - but new system would instantly cut bills''. Below the headline is a sub-headline: 'Campaigner Professor Richard Murphy explains why the cost of energy for Brits is so much, and the ways in which the government can help to save household bills'. The author is listed as 'By Professor Richard Murphy & Milica Cosic, News Reporter'. The publication date is '21:32, 1 Sep 2022'. Below the author info are social sharing icons for Facebook, Twitter, WhatsApp, and LinkedIn, followed by a '13 COMMENTS' link. The text of the article summary is: 'With millions of Brits set to see their bills soar by £1,578 a year on average by October, a campaigner explains why energy costs so much, and how price fixing works against users.'

The article is based on the Twitter thread on energy pricing that was posted here on this blog. The Mirror said to me that it's the best idea to solve this crisis that they've seen as yet. There were strong hints yesterday that the EU is looking at measures like this. let's hope so.
