

Funding the Future

Just because we can get rid of the Tories without propo...

Published: January 13, 2026, 11:37 am

This was YouGov's poll published yesterday:

YouGov @YouGov · 13h

Our latest VI poll has Labour with a "33pt" lead over the Tories, the highest of any recorded poll since the late 1990s. (Fieldwork 28-29 Sep)

Con: 21% (-7 from 23-25 Sep)
Lab: 54% (+9)
Lib Dem: 7% (-2)
Green: 6% (-1)
Reform UK: 4% (+1)
SNP: 5% (+1)

yougov.co.uk/topics/politic...

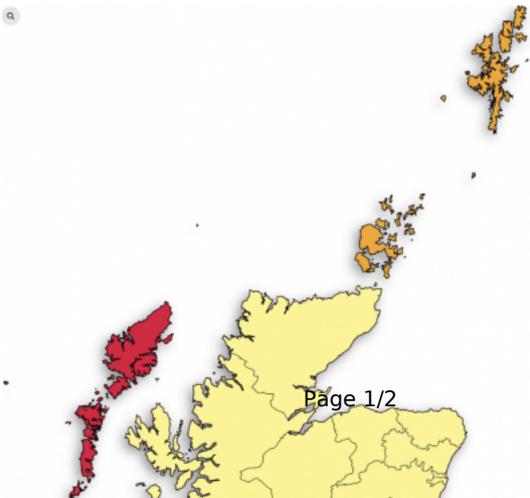

YouGov Westminster voting intention
If there were a general election held tomorrow, which party would you vote for? %

Party	Percentage
Con	21%
Lab	54%
Lib Dem	7%
SNP	5%
Plaid Cymru	1%
Reform UK	4%
Green	6%
Other	1%

YouGov 28-29 September 2022

403 3,687 7,111

This was the resulting election map:

This is, of course, quite extraordinary and may not last.

But the question still remains, is this what democracy should look like in the UK? Or is proportional representation still better? Should minorities ever be as under-represented as this map would suggest that poll would mean?

And, can good government, or governance, come from this?