

Lessons from a curlew

Published: January 13, 2026, 9:44 am

I was on the Norfolk coast yesterday, walking, having tea and coffee, taking time to share ideas in the way only possible on a walk, and birdwatching, of course. One of the few occasions when I completely forget political economy is when I have a pair of binoculars to my eyes.

The bird that dominated the day was the curlew. A number of them offered quite amazing views of their stunning beauty and one in flight shared its distinctive song. Posting this video is my reflection on a great autumn afternoon, with sentiments I share.

<https://youtu.be/exAvSgLW7sQ>