This article was in The Express online yesterday:

The screenshot shows the top of the Express website. At the top left is the Express logo with a red flower icon. To the right is a 'Discount' label and social media icons for search and Facebook. Below the logo is a navigation bar with links: HOME, NEWS, SHOWBIZ & TV, SPORT, COMMENT, FINANCE. A secondary navigation bar includes: UK, POLITICS, ROYAL, WORLD, US, SCIENCE, WEATHER, WEIRD, HISTO. Below that is a breadcrumb trail: Home > News > UK. A large black banner with white and red text reads: 'BLACK FRIDAY COMING SOON: ALL YOU NEED TO'. Below the banner are three article thumbnails. The first shows colorful socks with the text 'Snuggle on the couch for the joy of cosy family nights in' and 'Advertorial'. The second shows Rishi Sunak with the text 'Rishi Sunak tipped to turn UK into a 'wasteland' with 'grim' plan'. The third shows a woman smiling with a restaurant menu in the background and the text 'Millionaire laughs at poor family in restaurant, then waitress hands him an...' and 'Sponsored'.

'Don't know how the bs sleep at night' — Bank of England skewered over rate hikes

A fiscal expert has told Express.co.uk the UK is facing the "worst recession in living memory" and said the blame lies with the Bank of England, which he branded the "villain in all this".

The whole article is based on an interview with me and concluded:

But Prof Murphy believes the Bank is now "out of control". He added: "Why are they doing this? Because we have a bunch of unelected, out-of-control people at the Bank of England whose main preoccupation is proving that they have a job to do when for the last 12 years they have had nothing whatsoever to do.

"They are creating a ghastly recession, the worst in living memory. I don't know how the bastards sleep at night."

If you want a summary of my sentiments on the motivation of the Bank of England, that's it.

The 'bastards' element was not intended for publication when I said it: the journalist did ask for permission to use it.
