This extract from Newsnight is deeply telling.

Zoe Gardner , who is a migration expert, makes three allegations. They are, firstly, that the government has created an asylum crisis by denying people safe-route access to the UK, forcing them into the hands of people smugglers and onto small boats.

Second, she suggested that the government has deliberately moved to putting asylum seekers into highly visible hotels to increase social tension around this issue.

And third, she suggests that the government has simply stopped asylum application processing at least at any meaningful level to increase tension.

I believe Zoe Gardner. I think that this crisis has been, if not created then greatly exacerbated by his government for deliberate reasons that can only be summarised as their gain at the expense of the misery of tens of thousands of people.

What do you think?
