

Sometimes batteries do need to be recharged

Easter is upon us. Whether you celebrate its religious significance, or not, this is a holiday, and after a period of quite intense activity, not least with regard to the development of this blog, I am focusing my efforts elsewhere over the next few days.

Both my sons are around, which does not happen very often these days. The weather looks as though it will be good. There are plenty of things to do. Please forgive me if there are fewer posts, and moderation takes longer than usual. Sometimes batteries do need to be recharged.
