

All I want is a future

I mentioned the despair of the young in my previous post.

The words of this young woman seem to sum that up particularly well.

She just wants a future. She walked slowly down a road to say so. She was arrested for doing so.

There was another protest in London yesterday. It was against the new low-emission zone. There were few police present, apparently. I have not heard of any arrests. But it blocked Trafalgar Square.

I have also said this morning that we still have the right to talk about alternatives to mainstream thinking. That is true. But for how long will we be able to share them?

This young woman will, under new powers, now probably get a ban from protesting. Her right to a basic freedom will be contained so that the profits of Shell and BP might be unlimited in order that human life on this planet might end.

Let's value what we have, and use it. The risk is, we might lose it.
